Parenting Course Brings Positive Change

Violence was a way of life for Dayna when he was growing up so when he had his own children, hitting them was the only form of discipline he knew.

Dayna would take out his anger and hurt on his kids – until the day they were taken away and he realised he would have to make big changes to get them back.

When he referred himself to a 14-week The Incredible Years parenting programme run by Family Works, his two facilitators constantly lifted him up and supported him to become a better parent.

Family Works helped Dayna to break the cycle of violence. He now connects well with his children who love being with their dad and are no longer scared of him.

Learning Kindness After Seeing Violence

Maya* didn't realise how much the abusive relationship she had left was still affecting her children, especially Ashley* and Emily*, her oldest daughters. Emily had started hitting her sister and would withdraw when upset. Ashley lacked confidence and wanted to protect her younger siblings by parenting them.

The family was referred to Family Works' Restore programme, which helps traumatised children to overcome the devastating effects of being exposed to domestic violence. Working with our social worker and programme facilitator, Emily learnt safe ways to express her frustration. Ashley gained more self-confidence and she now lets Mum be the parent.

"Thanks to the eight-week programme, we are all getting along better at home," says Maya.
